Man dies from stabbing

By BPD

At about 12:07 PM on Tuesday May 8, 2018, officers assigned to District C-6 (South Boston) responded to a radio call for a person stabbed in the area of 112 Southampton Street in Boston. On arrival, officers located a male victim in his fifties suffering from an apparent stab wound. The victim, suffering life-threatening injuries, was transported to an area hospital where he was later pronounced deceased.

The Boston Police Department is actively investigating the facts and circumstances surrounding this incident. Given the heavy amount of vehicular and pedestrian traffic at the time of the incident, we are asking anyone who was in the area to report anything they may have seen that appeared to be suspicious. Even small details can make a big difference to our investigators. Anyone with information is strongly urged to contact Boston Police Homicide Detectives at (617) 343-4470.

Community members wishing to assist this investigation anonymously can do so by calling the CrimeStoppers Tip Line at 1 (800) 494-TIPS or by texting the word 'TIP' to CRIME (27463). The Boston Police Department will stringently guard and protect the identities of all those who wish to help this investigation in an anonymous manner.

Police say armed robber returned to scene to retrieve phone she'd dropped

Boston Police report arresting a woman they say pushed an elderly woman to the floor of a South End pharmacy at knife point and took her purse Sunday night.

Police say officers didn't have to go far to arrest Mary Gallas, 37, because as they were still on scene, she returned to the CVS at 400 Tremont St. to look for her phone, which she dropped during the robbery. Officers had picked up the phone, along with the knife they say Gallas dropped right outside the store as she ran away, police say. The victim's purse, meanwhile, was recovered from the Atlington Street bridge.

Gallas was charged with armed robbery of somebody over 60 and assault and battery on a victim over 60.

The Sound of Music, national tour presented by Boch Center at Wang Theatre, Boston, through May 13. www.bochcenter.org or 844-753-8364

BY JULES BECKER

Rodgers and Hammerstein II did something good for their last collaboration—the very hummable score of the 1959 Broadway musical "The Sound of Music." While the hit show won the 1960 best musical Tony, their great score remains far more compelling than the tame book with its historically inaccurate description of Austria's response to Nazism and the 1938 Third Reich Anschluss.

Co-authors Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse have half of Austria not speaking to the other half, though almost all Austrians—except Communists, gypsies and of course Jews—actually welcomed the Germans into their homeland without hesitation (a welcome that is well-documented by photos).

Director Matt Lenz, following in original revival director Jack O'Brien's footsteps, has made Austrian sympathies clear by providing five side by side long Nazi banners bearing large swastikas as the telling backdrop for the pivotal late second act Kitzberg Concert Hall Stage competition—after which the winning von Trapp family escapes.

Without diminishing the appeal of Rodgers and Hammerstein's last great score, the current well-sung and visually striking tour at Boch Center's Wang Theatre has significantly strengthened the impact of the musical's anti-Nazism message.

Right from the start, a handsome design and a talented, energetic cast help to compensate for inadequacies in the original Broadway text—suggested by "The Trapp Family Singers" by Maria von Trapp. Douglas W. Schmidt's vivid scenic design—from the spare Nonnberg Abbey to the elegant terrace and living room—enhance Maria's personal odyssey from postulant to family governess (in reality a tutor for only one of the children) and Captain von Trapp's wife (actually in 1927). Natasha Katz's nuanced lighting—with rich silhouettes and especially poetic light and shadow as the von Trapps flee the Nazis—often reflects the changes affecting Austria more evocatively than Lindsay and Crouse's far too understated narrative.

Jake Mills as fictional high pressure promoter Max Detweiler and Melissa McKamie as marriage-seeking socialite Elsa Schraeder have the right alarming readiness to accept a Nazi Austria—particularly in the disturbing number "No Way to Stop It."

Most of all, Lenz's earnest, high energy ensemble does full justice to the winning score. Jill-Christine Wiley brings fresh phrasing and gesturing to Maria's rendition—especially on the title number and the snappy children-involving song "The Lonely Goatherd." Mike McLean looks too young to play World War I veteran Captain Georg von Trapp and needs more tenacity in the early going but he does find the anti-Nazi's heart and feeling—most notably in the moving "Edelweiss."

Boston Conservatory graduate Lauren Kidwell (M.F.A. in musical theater) proves a big-voiced standout as the Mother Abbess, who remembers the joy of singing the brilliantly detailed "My Favorite Things" in her youth. She brings crisp gesturing to the number's title items and joins Maria's reminiscence with gusto.

Her first act-closing solo on the spirited "Climb Every Mountain" is a breakout show-stopper. Jonathan Warren, recreating Danny Mefford's high-stepping choreography, has the talented young performers playing the von Trapp children warming to Maria as they embrace music and singing under her guidance.

Dramatic license has the family climbing to safety at night when they actually took a train to Italy in broad daylight—eventually, of course, immigrating to the United States. As the von Trapp singers performed, they were troubled by the sight of Jewish children being mistreated by their classmates. Lindsay and Crouse do not include this important factor.

Still, Lenz—and O'Brien before him—add needed edginess—notably at the Kitzberg Concert Hall. Enjoy your favorite things in this strong revival, but do keep in mind the book's regrettably mild treatment of the enormity of Austria's complicity with the Nazis.

Pet of the Week

Meet Alberto, a 1 year old guinea pig with beautiful yellow and grey fur. He's shy around people now, but with a little time (and some tasty treats) he'll make a great friend. Alberto has fought with other guinea pigs in the past, and would prefer to be spoiled in a cage to himself! Bring a picture of the habitat where Alberto will live, which should be at least 2' by 4'. Lofts with ramps can add space. Guinea pigs need grain, hay and fresh fruits/veggies every day. They need a secure hiding house, (you can use a store bought plastic one or a cardboard box), litter box with soft bedding, and plenty of enrichment and toys. Safe to chew wood items or various cardboard items from around the house are great toys. Gentle handling will help Alberto get used to people. There are many ways to design a guinea pig enclosure and if you want ideas, feel free to visit and have a staff member walk you through it. If you think Alberto might be a good match for you, please plan a visit to our shelter today or call 617.226.6602. The shelter is open Tuesday through Thursday 1-7pm & Friday through Sunday 1-4pm, excluding some holidays.

South End Kicks raises $145K

For SECHC

BY MICHELE D. MANISCALCO

The modern, airy setting of the Ink Block Entertainment Lounge, 300 Harrison Avenue and the invitation's urging to wear one's favorite sneakers, or "kicks," lent a casual and light-hearted air to the South End Community Health Center's (SECHC) "South End Kicks" fundraiser held on Thursday evening, April 26. Approximately 250 guests enjoyed light and healthy snacks, adult beverages including a tropically-inspired signature cocktail; music from saxophonist and music educator Brett Walberg and his trio; and a free selfie booth to capture memories of the evening.

Celebratory remarks came from Jim Braude and Margery Eagan of WGBH's "Boston Public Radio" show; from Senator Elizabeth Warren, who spoke on video; and from South End Jovita Fontanez, who was the first Hispanic female head of both Boston's Fair Housing Commission and Electoral Commission. According to SECHC director of external relations Henry Goodrow, the event took in $145,000. In a follow-up e-mail, Goodrow explained where the proceeds will be directed.

"We did highlight several innovative women and children's health programs for support during our "Fund the Future" segment, such as our Healthy Mom/Healthy Baby program, which is a group-based approach to delivering well-child care that also empowers new mothers by reducing social isolation, addressing their health and wellness needs, and providing emotional support. Donors also contributed to our Latina Support Group, Wellness Group, Opioid Support Group and Baby Café."

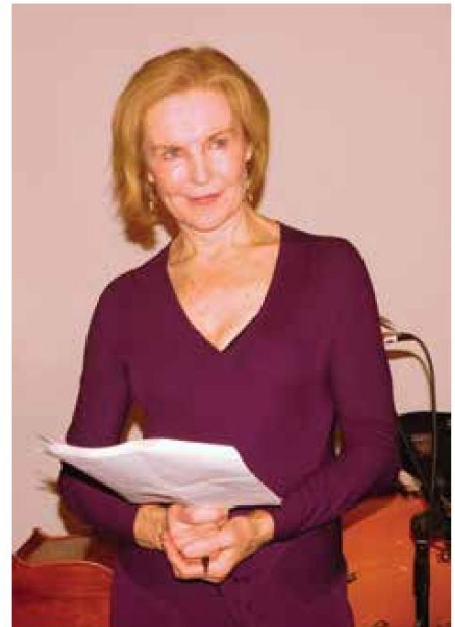

In keeping with the "kicks" theme, the auction featured sports-oriented items such as tickets for four to a private suite at Gillette Stadium on Patriots opening day in September; a round of golf for three at The Country Club in Brookline; and four box seats near first base at Fenway Park.

In addition to the auction, guests could purchase balloons for $25 to $100 that contained surprise gift certificates of corresponding values for businesses including Foodie's Urban Market, M. Flynn jewelers, Sadhana yoga, Barre3, Frenchie, Boston Chops, Banyan Bar and Refuge, BRIX Wine and South End Formaggio.

Sponsor Ghost Tequila showed off its wares in a popular dragon-fruit margarita with a slightly spicy flavor and bright, magenta hue that lent an exotic note to a Thursday evening in Boston.

Braude commented to the South End News on the importance of the fundraiser and of SECHC. "As a resident of greater Boston, there's nobody who doesn't know about the wonderful work that's being done here. I have to say, Margery and I are very busy and normally when we are asked [to appear at events], we have to say 'no' because our schedules don't permit, but the second we were asked to do this for the South End Community Health Center, before the person finished the sentence, we said, 'Where do we have to be and when? We'd be honored to be part of the historic work done by this health center.'"

In her recorded remarks, Senator Warren offered a "Shout out to all of the South End Community Health Centers women leaders. You are the best!" she said, fists raised in triumph. Warren continued, "I love community health centers... You keep people healthy and out of the hospital and you provide care that is specific to the needs of the people in your community."
