

Michael Bivins Basketball Court Ready for Action

SUBMITTED BY BPD

On Friday, August 10, 2018, Commissioner William Gross had the pleasure of catching up with one of Boston's favorite sons and music legend, Michael Bivins of Bell Biv Devoe and New Edition fame, during a ceremony in which the city officially named and dedicated the basketball court at Ramsay Park in his honor. Commissioner Gross was honored to be a part of the celebration and made a point to commend Bivins for supporting his old neighborhood and never forgetting where he came from. The recently refurbished basketball court, now named the Michael L. Bivins Court, will go a long way in giving kids a quality place to ball while keeping them out of trouble. Growing up, Bivins said his mother would always tell him, "if you need to release some stress, go play ball."

Christian Scales as Kwamaine and Kadhaj Bennett as Jalil in Company One world premiere of "Leftovers" at Strand Theatre

'Leftovers' warm and filling

Leftovers, Company One Theatre, Strand Theatre, Boston, through August 18. Pay-what-you-can. Zero minimum, $10 recommendation. companyone.org

BY JULES BECKER

No human beings should ever feel like leftovers. Two South Philly brothers—high school graduate Jalil and his younger brother Kwamaine—are in danger of experiencing that feeling as top floor residents in a run-down though structurally sound brownstone building in a poor part of town.

Josh Wilder, a Philadelphia native himself, is probing Jalil and Kwamaine's experiences in "Leftovers," a new play that follows their struggle to overcome poverty and uncertainty about their respective futures. Wilder's play may need some tweaking, but Company One—now a company in residence at the Strand Theatre—is capturing all of his drama's heart and celebration of family ties in a world premiere at once involving and inspiring.

As the play begins, those ties are precarious. Jalil is angry that his father Chris was a no-show at his graduation. Unsure about his future, he has been speaking to a recruiter about enlisting in the air force. Kwamaine wants Chris to land a job that he can keep. He also hopes that his family can be "all together for one day Cosby Show happy."

In the absence of his father Chris—who has problems with alcohol, Kwamaine sees the comedy's television father Cliff Huxtable as his role model. Jalil and Kwamaine's mother has her sons' full respect but finds herself in an unsatisfying cycle of work at her job and at home—a cycle she hopes will end if her lottery number wins. At the same time, she sees Jalil going to college and fears that he could get killed fighting for 'BS' overseas. Complicating the mix is hustler Dijon, whose stock and trade includes CD's and DVD's.

Into this seemingly impossible situation—sharply enhanced by Erik D. Diaz' brownstone scenic design—Wilder introduces a pivotal element of magical realism in the form of a very high dandelion dominating stage right. Undaunted by urban challenge, this high riser grows through pavement and awakens the dreams and deep wishes of the sons.

Wishes are made on pieces dropping from the dandelion. Will the sons actually receive full day passes to Six Flags? Will the family come together briefly or indefinitely? Will Chris become a responsible adult? Will Dijon, working for the city, have a significant impact on the dandelion? Answers will be forthcoming, and eventually the sons will meet Huxtable in a surreal moment of insight. There are stretches that could do with tightening, but Wilder does have affecting things to say about the relationships of siblings, parents and children and spouses.

Under Summer L. Williams' strong direction, those relationships and the difficulties attending them are richly portrayed by a solid cast. Christian Scales is a real find capturing Kwamaine's hopefulness and fervor. Kadahj Bennett, who actually worked at the Strand, finds all of Jalil's competing emotions and concerns. Scales and Bennett have all the warmth and caring of actual brothers. Lyndsay Allyn Cox catches the no-nonsense tenacity of Raquelle, while Colgan B. Johnson convinces as vulnerable Chris. Irvin Scott has the right elusiveness as Dijon. Marc Pierre is riveting in the tricky if flashy role of Huxtable as mentor.

Wilder began working on his play before Bill Cosby actually faced charges for sexual crimes. Still, "Leftovers" has a lot to say about the empowerment of each individual even in the absence of celebrated icons and mentors. In his playbill interview, Wilder reminds theatergoers that parents and any others that raise them are their first icons. "Leftovers" may not possess a full preparation as yet, but Company One's striking presentation makes its savory mix well worth sampling.

City says people living in storage facility

BY SOUTH END NEWS STAFF

The Boston Herald reported on Wednesday that the city shut down the CubeSmart Self Storage on Massachusetts Avenue on Tuesday in the South End.

The Boston Police said in a statement, "While surveying the facility, officials observed and discovered several individuals using the storage facility as living quarters. Specifically, officials noted that in addition to being occupied, some of the units contained curtains, coolers, food and electric cords. Officers informed the occupants that given the unsafe living conditions and health conditions, the facility was being closed and vacated pending further review."
