SUBMITTED BY
ELLIS EARLY LEARNING

Ellis Early Learning raised $676,000 to support the nonprofit's mission during its annual benefit event held on Nov. 7 in Boston's South End. The theme of this year's event was "Celebrating Ellis and the Magic of Childhood" and the organization honored Natixis Investment Managers as a "Champion of Early Childhood Education."

Over 300 supporters, parents and teachers convened at the Boston Center for the Arts' Cyclorama for the event, co-chaired by Ellis board member Sean Curran, the principal of Waterville Consulting, and Jerome Smith, regional head

Climate resilience trumped affordable housing in the South End

On Nov. 19, the Zoning Board of Appeal rejected a non-profit group's plans to convert a Shawmut Avenue office building into affordable apartments because it would have one apartment on the first floor despite being in Boston's coastal flood resilience overlay district, where residences are supposed to be higher than that in anticipation of flooding as sea levels continue to rise and storms become more fierce.

The board's vote, however, will likely only delay, not stop, Inquilinos Boricuas en Acción's proposal to convert space inside 403-405 Shawmut Ave. into six apartments, the building only has five residential units, on the upper floors, or it somehow rejiggers its plans to fit six units above the ground level and its anticipated possible flood level in the coming decades.

"This is coming as a bit of a surprise," IBA attorney Jacob Taylor said.

The overlay district, adopted in 2019, covers parts of the city from East Boston to Dorchester that could experience significant ocean, or in some cases, river, flooding in the future.

The IBA proposal was part of a larger package reviewed by the zoning board, in which IBA also sought approval to do extensive renovations on several buildings in the South End in which it already rents affordable units, from roof replacements to kitchen and electrical upgrades.

Those projects, along with the Shawmut Avenue proposal, needed separate zoning-board approval because they sit in another

"overlay district" in which new buildings or large renovation projects have to be certified as not affecting the amount of rainwater that percolates into the ground. That water is necessary to keep the wooden pilings that support so many buildings in the South End, the Back Bay and Bay Village from drying out, which could lead to rotting.

The board approved all of the projects, including the Shawmut Avenue one, as compliant with the city's groundwater-conservation regulations.

of community affairs for Amazon. Special guests included state Sen. Lydia Edwards, state Rep. Aaron Michlewitz and state Rep. Samantha Montano.

"We are grateful for the tremendous support we receive year after year that allows us to deliver high-quality early childhood education," said Lauren Cook, CEO of Ellis Early Learning. "The support of our community is critical to our mission, and we know that the impact of these funds will be felt deeply by the children and families served by Ellis."

Natixis has been a steadfast and generous partner to Ellis for 16 years, providing volunteer leadership through Ellis's Board of Directors and Board of Trustees. The company, which once again sponsored this year's event, has also provided countless volunteer hours with Ellis children and staff. Natixis is a champion of global social impact through its dedicated involvement with philanthropic initiatives that address community-based goals, including education programs that support vulnerable populations in the region.

"We are proud to partner with Ellis, an extraordinary organization making early childhood education inclusive and accessible for members of our community," said David Giunta, Chief Executive Officer of Natixis Investment Managers in the US. "Our longstanding, collaborative partnership has been impactful for the Ellis family and fulfilling to the Natixis employees who have contributed to Ellis's mission."

Ellis is grateful for the generous support from its many event sponsors, including Amazon, Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts, Eastern Bank, National Grid, Olivia's Organics, New England Patriots Foundation, Pure Insurance and The TJX Companies.

Ellis has strengthened Boston's diverse working families by providing high-quality education and care for children since 1885. The organization is committed to helping all children develop the social, emotional and academic skills they need to be successful in school and in life.

Ellis stands out for being among the most socio-economically, racially and culturally diverse organizations serving the children of Boston. Ellis engages over 300 children per year in full-time early education programming, with an emphasis on program excellence and diverse enrollment. Of its participants, 80% are people of color. The nonprofit is licensed by the Department of Early Education and Care and accredited by the National Association for the Education of Young Children.
