A Riveting Trilogy

Should theatergoers see “The Lehman Trilogy” as a cautionary drama about the dark side of the American dream? Has Italian Jewish playwright Stefano Massini turned the recurring entry of the Kaddish into a metaphor for mourning the Lehman family’s increasing assimilation over generations? No matter where audience members stand—and this critic sees both elements in this far-ranging 2020 Tony Award winner, the riveting Huntington staging (the first American production since its Broadway one) should have everyone giving timely attention not only to the rise and fall of the Lehmans but also to the nature and responsibilities of financial success.

Stretching from 1844 Montgomery, Alabama to the family investment bank’s bankruptcy in 2008 New York City, “The Lehman Trilogy”—adapted by Ben Powers into a three-act, near three and one half hour play (from Massini’s original five-hour work—Italy, 2015)—begins with the migration of Ashkenazic German Jew Henry (Heyum) Lehman from Bavaria to Montgomery, Alabama—where he establishes a dry goods store. Brothers Emanuel and Mayer eventually join him and collaborate in the production of plantation cotton. Strategy-rich Henry is seen as the head with an emotional Emanuel the arm and Mayer—fondly called “Potato”—the peace-making middle man.

The fairly religious siblings pray before work and rest on the Sabbath. At moments of good fortune they regularly say “Baruch Ha-Shem” (Blessed is God). When Henry dies in 1855, Emanuel and Mayer sit Shiva for the traditional seven days. Emanuel’s son Philip attends Hebrew school, and the brothers refer to the Talmud. The immigrant Lehmans have vivid images of the holidays of Sukkot and Shavuot. Did the early Lehmans face anti-Semitism in their years in the South? The play seems to avoid this question (although being able to take off the Sabbath can be seen as a positive sign). More conspicuous is the lack of a real confrontation with the slavery behind the production of the cotton. To Huntington Theatre’s credit, a part of the playbill entitled “The Lehman Legacy: History in Context” candidly notes that both Henry and Mayer were slave owners.

After plantation fires and the end of the Civil War, the family’s business interests and investments gradually expand to include oil, coal and later still to electricity, railroads and even planes. Generation by generation, though, the Lehmans become more assimilated. Philip will observe, “Our flour is money.” Shiva is shortened to three days for the passing of Mayer (1897). Later still—during the tenure of Philip’s son Robert (Billie), comic books and Hollywood become an additional focus. A mourning period for Philip lasts all of three minutes (1947). ..

Complementing the Kaddish motif is Jeanette Oisuk Yew’s inspired projection of the entire text of the prayer in the early going and later on its side when the family’s assimilation is more pronounced.

Thanks to Carey Perloff’s smart pacing and taut direction, the growing assimilation and financial rise and fall of the family are sharply dramatized. Three actors—gifted Steven Skybell (acclaimed for his Tevye in a recent Yiddish staging of “Fiddler on the Roof” Off-Broadway), Joshua David Robinson and Firdous Bamji—vividly portray dozens of characters including successors at Lehman Brothers—the last Richard Dick Fuld. (Theatergoers will do well to consult the playbill’s very informative Lehman Family Tree) Skybell captures Henry’s immigrant enthusiasm and Philip’s financial savvy and even convinces as Robert’s outspoken wife Ruth Lamar. Robinson catches Emanuel’s remarkable drive and Mayer’s son Herbert (eventually Governor of New York)’s strong independent-mindedness. Firdous Bamji demonstrates all of Mayer’s mediating skills and last actual Lehman Robert’s fascination with the arts. In a striking Hebrew school lesson about the Ten Plagues, Bamji quickly switches voices for the students identifying the first nine—with Robinson’s Herbert pointedly asking the rabbi why God did not kill the Pharaoh rather than the first born males.

Very versatile musician Joe LaRocca orchestrates the ups and downs of the Lehmans on the clarinet, the sax and the flute. In the early going, clarinet accompaniment evokes Henry’s spirit of adventure. Sara Brown’s ingenious box-dominated scenic design complements the shifting priorities of the Lehmans. Dede Aylte’s costumes—black cutaways in the early going and less formal wear later for the likes of Robert—parallel the family’s growing secularism and assimilation. Robert Wierzel’s lighting for Robert’s tenure matches his interest in the arts.

The rise and fall of the Lehmans—a family repeatedly governed by hubris as much as by spirit and accomplishment—is clearly a story with tragic dimension. Massini’s ambitious drama could do more to confront the place of slavery in the title family’s ascent. Even so, the play’s absorbing three acts form a haunting warning about the perils of assimilation and financial overreaching. Huntington Theatre’s wonderfully evocative staging makes “The Lehman Trilogy” an essential investment for all theatergoers.

Greater Boston.”

Most recently, Young demonstrated his responsiveness and capabilities by quickly establishing a multifaceted response to the COVID pandemic by helping thousands of neighbors in crisis – distributing 14,773 emergency items, including food, diapers, wipes, hygiene kits and school supplies. In addition, he established a network of partners to expand ABCD’s reach throughout Boston and the Mystic Valley.

Of his new appointment Young said, “I’m looking forward to continuing my commitment to directly improving the lives of people in the communities where I was raised and volunteered as a community organizer working on the issues of affordable housing, as well as voter education and voter registration. I am appreciative of Sharon’s confidence in my abilities and excited to take on this new role.”

As Director of ABCD Field Operations and Legislative Affairs since 2018, Young has led ABCD’s Community Coordination Department, overseeing 14 sites throughout Boston and the Mystic Valley that provide tens of thousands of low-income residents with access to food, fuel assistance, elder services, tax assistance, holiday assistance, housing, childcare, workforce development programs and more.

Under Young’s leadership, several new initiatives and programs were created. ABCD Connect is an information and referral program in which clients can receive professional guidance including immediate access to a case manager and referrals to specific programs and services. ABCD’s Food Delivery Program and Mobile Food Access Van strengthen ABCD’s existing Food Security Program by creating access for residents with mobility or transportation barriers. In partnership with Stop n’ Shop, the Food Delivery Program focuses on homebound senior clients and those with disabilities who have difficulty getting to food access centers. Clients indicate food preferences and dietary restrictions when ordering. The Mobile Food Access Van plays an important role in reducing food insecurity by distributing food to those who may not live near an existing food access center, have mobility issues, or generally struggle with getting to food access centers during operating hours. Options include fresh fruits, vegetables, protein and other essential foods.

Young began his ABCD career as a volunteer advisory board member at ABCD’s South End Neighborhood Service Center and then joined the Community Coordination Department in 1998. He was quickly promoted to the position of Director of Legislative Affairs working with ABCD’s Executive Department to direct the agency’s policy and advocacy strategies. In addition, he is responsible for cultivating relationships with policymakers at the federal, state, and local levels to ensure the voices of low-income residents are heard by raising awareness of ABCD programs and services.

Prior to ABCD, Young served as Chief of Staff for State Representative Byron Rushing and Legislative Director for City Councilor Thomas Keane. He holds a bachelor’s degree from Harvard College and an MBA from Suffolk University.

Born and raised in Boston’s South End neighborhood, Young now resides in Arlington with his wife and two children. In his free time, he enjoys gardening and cooking.

the University of New Hampshire through the school's campus-based program, following in his older sister's footsteps who was matched with her own mentee, or Little, two years prior. Over the last 38 years, he watched his first Little, Chris, graduate from college, get married, have two sons whom he proudly refers to as his nephews, suffer loss and find love again. Roberts' mentoring experience was so rewarding that the father of two daughters re-engaged with the organization in 2014 after becoming an empty nester.

"Being matched with my second mentee, Xzavier Jones, was humbling, says Roberts, who ran the Boston Marathon in 2015 to raise more than $14,000 for BBBSEM. "When we first met it was a bit awkward as the nine-year-old was timid and our conversations were often one-way. But, after settling into our routine we learned to connect with an activity, whether it be playing basketball, going to the trampoline park, or really anything outside with the promise of food and more open dialogue at the end. This launched our never-ending search for Boston's best burger! It grew into Xzavier's appreciation for sushi – which made me, a huge sushi fan, very pleased."

Although the duo resided in the same city, they lived in what felt like worlds apart. Not only did Roberts expand his Little's pallet, but he was also there when he submitted his first mountain and took his first flight – to Florida to meet Robert's original Little, Chris. Over the last nine years, Xzavier has struggled with family dynamics, grief, social pressures, exposure to inner-city violence, and the academic and socioeconomic impact of the pandemic. They now talk openly about overcoming these challenges as the recent high school graduate plans to pursue local job opportunities and his ambition to be an influencer.

"I never faced many of these obstacles, but I listened, encouraged and empathized," says Roberts, an engineer. "Often, I can sense the weight coming off his shoulders as he lets it all out. I know I can't solve all the problems of the world, but it gives me joy to know our relationship allows him to have someone to confide in, help carry the burden and walk alongside as he goes through challenges in his life. I became a Big to "give" and unknowingly ended up "receiving" so much. There is no doubt that my relationship with Xzavier has also made me a better person as he has challenged me to be patient and to open my eyes to living in someone else's shoes."

Xzavier's mother, Sharina, registered her son to participate in the program after her eldest son had such a positive mentoring experience through the same organization. As a single mother, having additional caring adults in her children's corner gave her the time and headspace to focus on work and everything else.

"It's good for them to have another outlet that they can look up to, especially a positive male role model; something they don't otherwise have," says Sharina. "Through his time with Brad, I have seen Xzavier take on more responsibility and assume more ownership when he has made a mistake. I always hoped for my children to do whatever their hearts desire, and this program is a great way for him to figure out whatever that may be for him. My heart is filled with overwhelming gratitude as the organization."

With research and proven outcomes at its core, BBBSEM creates matches based on shared interests, geography and personality and serves as a consistent resource for Bigs, Littles and their families. The organization serves as a bridge between communities and community partners, helping to address larger social issues, such as race and education gaps.

"Brad has always inspired me to do better, and if it wasn't for him, I wouldn't have improved on things like my public speaking and better managing my emotions," says Jones. "Brad has shown me there is more to the world than I expected. For that I am grateful and wholeheartedly would recommend this program to my peers."

Mentoring is one protective measure that adults can take to minimize risk factors, such as lack of motivation, anxiety, stress, and isolation, that are threatening children's mental health and academic success. A national study of 950 youth from eight Big Brothers Big Sisters agencies showed that positive relationships between Littles and their Bigs have a direct and measurable impact on children's lives. Big Brothers Big Sisters' matches consistently spend more time together, and continue as a match for longer periods, than those in other mentoring programs. Results also showed Bigs help Littles learn right from wrong, make better life choices, do better in school and advance to the next grade level.

"Brad and Xzavier's almost nine-year friendship is a testament to the incredible work of our volunteers and staff members who keep kids learning, engaged and having fun," says Mark O'Donnell, President & CEO of BBBSEM. "Now, more than ever, youth and families need additional support. We need more caring adults, like Brad, to step up for our children to become mentors to ensure they reach their fullest potential."

Anyone can become a Big as the agency welcomes youth and adults of all races, ethnicities, cultures, socio-economic backgrounds, genders, sexual orientations, and physical abilities. Volunteers must be 18 years old or older and be able to commit a few hours a few times a month for at least a year and have a passion for positively impacting a young person's life.

In its 74th year, BBBSEM has created and served more than 20,000 matches. The nonprofit is now enrolling and matching Littles and Bigs. For more information, to register your children or to become a volunteer, visit: www.emassbigs.org.
